

SUBJECT AND PREDICATE

Subject vs Predicate

The subject of the sentence is what (or whom) the sentence is about.

The term 'subject' refers to the doer of the action in a sentence. It is either a noun, a pronoun, or a noun phrase.

EXAMPLE: The cat is sleeping in the sun

-the word cat is the subject.

A predicate contains the verb that represents the action done by the subject, the receiver of the action, other information about the subject, the verb or the time/place of the action and so on

EXAMPLE:

The cat is sleeping in the sun.

The clause sleeping in the sun is the predicate; it's dictating what the cat is doing.

Can you identify the subject and predicate?

1. He reads.

→ The subject is he, and the predicate is reads.

2. He reads the book.

→ The subject is still he, but the predicate has some extra words: reads the book. Since it's still modifying the subject and contains a verb, it's still serving the same function.

3. He reads the book in the park on Tuesdays.

→ It's still he! The predicate is slightly more complicated: reads the book in the park on Tuesdays.

4. Maria's sisters are going to the pool.

—>The subject in this sentence isn't Maria, even though at first glance it seems like it is. This sentence is actually about Maria's sisters; they are the subject. The predicate is are going to the pool because it shows what the sisters are doing.

5. Aileen really liked the piece of artwork because it reminded her of her childhood.

—>Aileen is the subject. Likewise, "it" is also a subject. This sentence has two parts, and because joins the two. Aileen is the subject of the predicate really liked the piece of artwork. It is the subject of the predicate reminded her of her childhood.

6. “There” is Not the Subject

Another example to watch for is a sentence that begins with “there” and has a form of the verb “to be.” Even though the word “there” is at the beginning of the sentence, next to the verb, it is not the subject. See if you can find the subject and predicate in this sentence:

There were three different desserts arranged on the table. First find the verb: “were arranged.” Then ask, “who or what were arranged?” The answer is “three different desserts,” which is the correct subject.

7. Sentences which do not begin with the subject

The subject may not always appear in the beginning of the sentence. It can come after the predicate.

For example: Here comes the bus.

“The bus” is the subject and “here comes” is the predicate.

8.Hidden subject

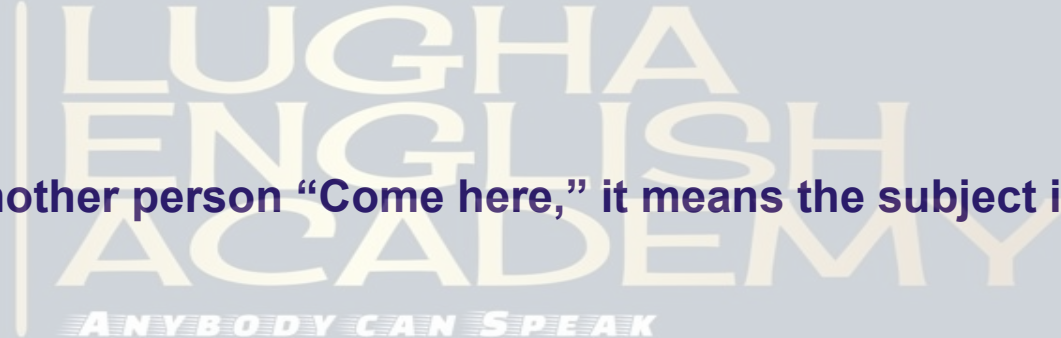

Subject can be hidden in some sentences.

In imperative sentences (sentences which give a command or an order),the subject is “you”.

For example: Come here.

Here,when one is telling another person “Come here,” it means the subject is the 2nd person who is listening.

In such sentences, the subject is you and it is understood.
